

A Visual 'Note': New College from an Unusual Angle

It is difficult to find novel perspectives of New College, but one such has emerged serendipitously in the last few months. It is now housed in the High Street Lodgings.

It is a pen, ink and watercolour depiction of the College seen from a rooftop of a house on the High Street in 1818. For the first time to our eyes the south side of our Great Quadrangle presents itself as a façade, with the chapel roof rising above it, the high elevation of the viewpoint, allowing it to be seen in toto.

The work is 12 x 17 7/8 inches, and is inscribed on an original washline mount, D "
